WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

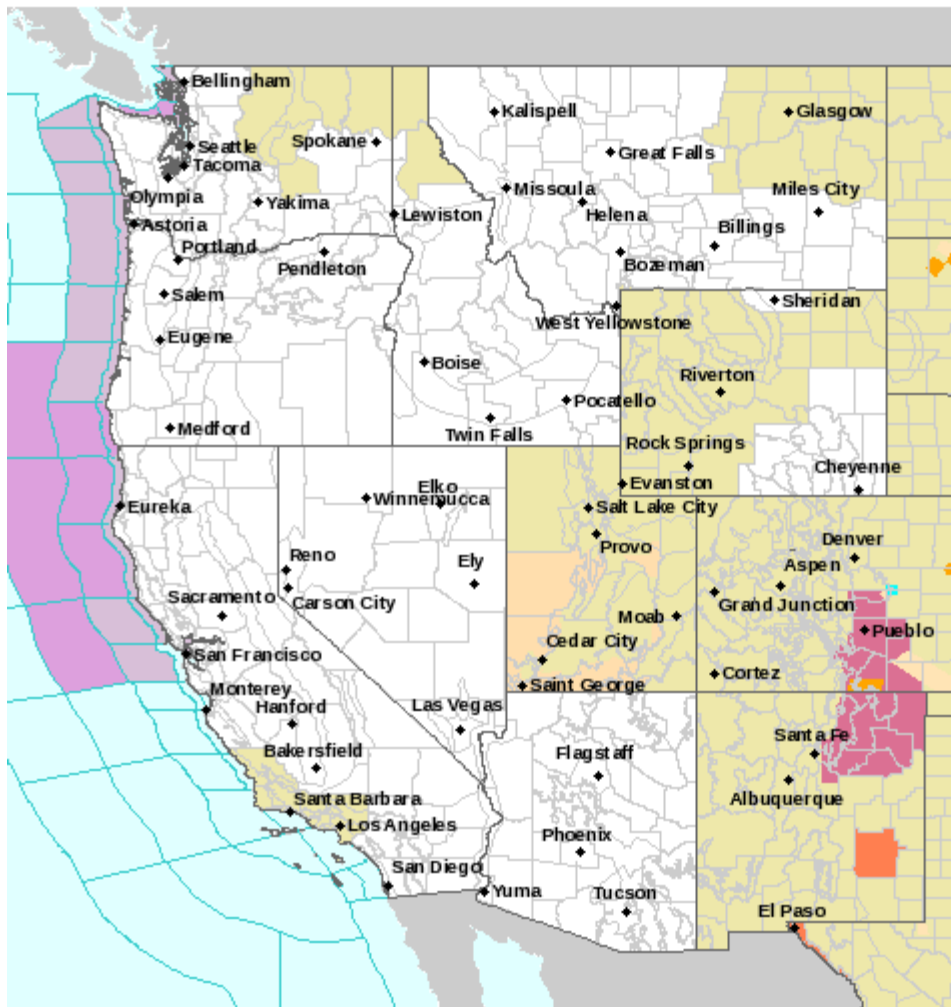

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Higher pressure will be lingering over Northern California today for another rather hot, very dry day inland. The warmest inland valley areas will be around 100-105. There will be a slight shift in the pattern Friday as a low currently centered on the central British Columbia coast moves south overnight to settle into place along the Washington/Canadian border, but Friday's sensible weather will continue to be much like today's, though perhaps a few degrees cooler in some northern areas. The Washington low will help a trough develop over the region this weekend with cooler temperatures. There will also be a very small chance of afternoon and evening showers and thunderstorms Sunday across the northern counties. Any thunderstorms or showers that develop seem likely to produce wetting rain (at least 0.10"), but some of any lightning that occurs could be fairly dry too. Temperatures will drop to below seasonal normals this weekend for most areas and stay there well into next week. Monday looks to be the coolest day with the warmest inland valleys around 90. Many areas will see low afternoon RH and only moderate to borderline poor overnight recovery through much the 7 day period as the trough affecting the region will be quite dry. Friday morning may see some areas having somewhat gusty north winds. Sunday moderately strong, gusty westerly winds with low RH will probably develop near and east of the Cascade/Sierra crest with gusts 30-35 mph. Otherwise, winds will have a diurnal pattern of quite light northerly directions overnight becoming onshore or up slope/drainage for the afternoons through Saturday, then Sunday into next week diurnal wind speeds will be quite a bit lighter in all areas.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Temperatures will warm a few more degrees today as a ridge of high pressure centered over the Desert Southwest will peak in strength. Maximum temperatures will be in the mid 80s to mid 90s across the mountains and mid 90s to 105 in the valleys. Temperatures will cool Friday and Saturday as a weak trough drops down the West Coast. Temperatures will be near to a little below normal Saturday through early next week as the trough remains in place. South to west winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will surface across the mountains and deserts Friday through early next week. Widespread minimum humidity in the single digits and teens along with poor nighttime humidity recovery will occur above and inland from the marine layer through early next week. Temperatures will warm gradually starting next Wednesday as high pressure builds westward from the central part of the country. Monsoonal moisture may come back to the area bringing the possibility of showers and thunderstorms to the mountains and deserts of Southern California starting next Wednesday.
